

STARTING A LAWSUIT: FILING A COMPLAINT

Here are some points to keep in mind that will help you during your research:

- 1) The sets of legal books have either supplements, or pocket parts, that keep the books up to date. A pocket part is a small pamphlet inserted into a pocket in the back of the book. A supplement is at the end of the set or compliments a single volume and is right next to the single volume. If you cannot find what you are looking for within the book, remember to check for a pocket part or look for a supplement;
- 2) Most legal books will have a preface, an appendix, an introduction, or something similar that will explain to you how to use the book correctly. Locate these sections and read them. Understanding how to use the material will give you the maximum benefit with a minimum amount of work;
- 3) Many sets of legal books have an index that is located either in the front of the set or in the back of the set; for individual books the index is in the back of the book. When searching for material, look in the index first. The index will refer you to the location where the information you want will be found.

The following list will give you a place to begin your research. This list is for the express purpose of helping you get started on your case research, and contains materials that are needed by the largest number of patrons. This list does not contain everything you may need; you must decide what other resources you will need and how in depth you want to be with your research! The library has many other resources available to you that relate to your specific issue-we suggest that you search them.
