

LEGAL CITATIONS

“The basic purpose of a legal citation is to allow the reader to locate a cited source accurately and efficiently.”¹

Legal Citations direct you to the volume, book, and page you need to find a case, law, or discussion relating to a legal issue.

A legal citation for a case may appear as:

Myers v. Fleetwood Farms, 271 P2d 263

This citation contains five parts: two party names, a volume number, the title, a series number, and the page number.

Myers	v.	Fleetwood Farms	, 271	P2d	263
		Second Party			Page
	Versus			Title and Series
First Party			Volume

The case is located in volume 271 of the Pacific Reporter 2nd on page 263. Cases often provide more than one citation.

Legal Citations for laws are similar, but contain fewer parts. A citation for a Nevada Law will appear in this format:

NRS 484.327
Subsection
Chapter
Nevada Revised Statutes

The Nevada Revised Statutes (NRS) fills over 40 volumes. Chapters are marked on the spine so that you can go directly to the book you need.

Legal Citations can vary between publications and may provide less information or include additional information, such as years, or subsections (§). If you find an unfamiliar citation or have difficulty locating the information, please check with our staff at the Reference Desk. If you wish to include a legal citation in your legal documents, publishers sometimes provide the citation on the title page. The Bluebook : a Uniform System of Citation is a very good source of information for creating legal citations to support your arguments.

“In all types of legal writing, whether by scholars or by practitioners, it is customary to cite an authority or authorities to show support for a legal or factual proposition or argument. An author may cite to authority that identifies the source of a quotation or authority referred to in the text; authority that directly states or clearly supports his or her legal or factual proposition...”²
