

William Haight Bradley

October 5, 1867- April 20, 1948

Clark County Commission- Appointed July 1, 1909

William H. Bradley served as one of the original Clark County commissioners after being appointed by Governor Denver Dickerson.

Born and raised near Napa, California, Bradley moved to southern Nevada during the first decade of the twentieth century. He settled in Searchlight and became president of the Pittsburg-Searchlight Company, a mining company.

Following the creation of Clark County by the Nevada State Legislature, Bradley announced his desire to serve on the new county commission. The Las Vegas Age applauded Bradley and the other appointees as "careful, conservative, and representative." Bradley was officially named to the commission on July 1, 1909.

Bradley's term on the county commission lasted just over one year. In November of 1910, Bradley resigned and moved to Oakville, California.

He lived in California for most of the rest of his life. Bradley died in 1948, four months after he moved to British Columbia, Canada.
